

Farm News

Use pure seed of proven varieties to make high yields of small grains, farmers were advised this week by D. R. Harbor, API extension assistant agronomist.

Some varieties of oats, wheat and barley resist diseases more than others and are better suited to Alabama conditions. Poor seed are certain to give poor results, said Harbor. Best varieties of late maturing oats are Red Rust Proof 43A, 100 bushel, and Nortex. These usually produce more and grow taller than other varieties. They are more difficult to combine than early maturing oats with short stems.

Fulgrain, Fulghum, Victorgram, and Fulx yield better than the other varieties that mature early. Fulghum is more susceptible to crown rust and grows taller than others of the early maturing group.

Farmers who plan to produce large quantities of feed from oats but have limited harvesting equipment should plant some of both the early and late maturing varieties. This gives a longer harvesting period in the spring, points out Harbor.

Oats must be treated with formaldehyde or cresol to control smut, the agronomist reminds growers.

In the northern part of the state, Sanford appears to be best wheat variety. Yields of wheat in the southern part of the state are rather low.

Sunrise is the recommended variety of barley to grow, except in the Tennessee Valley. There, Maroonbarb does best. No barley variety tested by the Alabama Experiment Station has proved satisfactory at any location south of Auburn.

Don't Hold Cotton Is Advice Offered By Helms

Auburn — Sell cotton now or hold it for a higher price that might come? That's a question as old as cotton growing itself—yet one which comes again and again to nag farmers.

Although there will be different opinions on the question as to when to sell, the Helms, API extension economist, firmly believes he can give the right answer. He says it will be wise for farmers not to hold cotton but to sell the crop as it is gathered if prices are still above government support level.

Helms believes that all signs point to lower cotton prices, a risky business this fall. U. S. cotton acreage is a sixth greater than last year and favorable growing weather has been reported throughout the cotton belt. These facts plus price resistance and hedge selling were factors in the spot cotton market's downward trend.

If we assume that normal yields will be met, we can expect cotton prices to drop even further, says Helms. By cotton picking time prices may be near government support level. Greater civilian employment and farm income may halt this downward trend, but price resistance probably will outweigh these factors.

Although it is impossible for anyone to predict accurately what cotton prices will be this winter, Helms said indications for lower cotton prices are too strong to ignore.

Montgomery — Director of Conservation Bert Thomas stated that fishermen from all over Alabama as well as many Gulf states are making ready for the 15th annual Alabama Deep Sea Fishing Rodeo off Dauphin Island, August 11, 12, and 13. This has come to be the outstanding deep sea fishing rodeo on the Gulf Coast, and hundreds of champion fishermen are expected to be on hand to set many new records for prize catches.

Town of Marion Raising
$100,000 To Rebuild Judson

Marion, Ala. — The town of Marion, home of Judson College for 100 years, has raised $40,000 toward its $100,000 goal to keep the school here where it was founded, according to John R. Wilbourne, financial co-chairman.

Mr. Wilbourne said he was certain the entire amount would be raised by Sept. 1, as local business men have decided to complete their drive by the time school opens on Sept. 8.

In a statement following the meeting of 22 local citizens July 17, when the campaign was launched, Lester M. Neely, Jr., public chairman, said that Marion was undertaking a big job for a small town but if our ancestors could build and rebuild Judson again by hand, we know the people in this area can handle the job that confronts them at this time.

The money raised through this drive will be held in escrow at the Marion Bank and Trust Co., by the Local Drive for Judson Committee until it is decided that the Judson question is sufficiently settled to allow the expenditure of the money for a building on the Judson campus.

Mr. Neely said that if the college is moved from Marion the money will be returned intact to the original contributors.

A sum of $1,000 designated as expense account for the alumni campaign, was turned over to the campaign chairman last week by the Junior Chamber of Commerce.
